HAVE YOU EXPERIENCED
HOUSING
DISCRIMINATION?

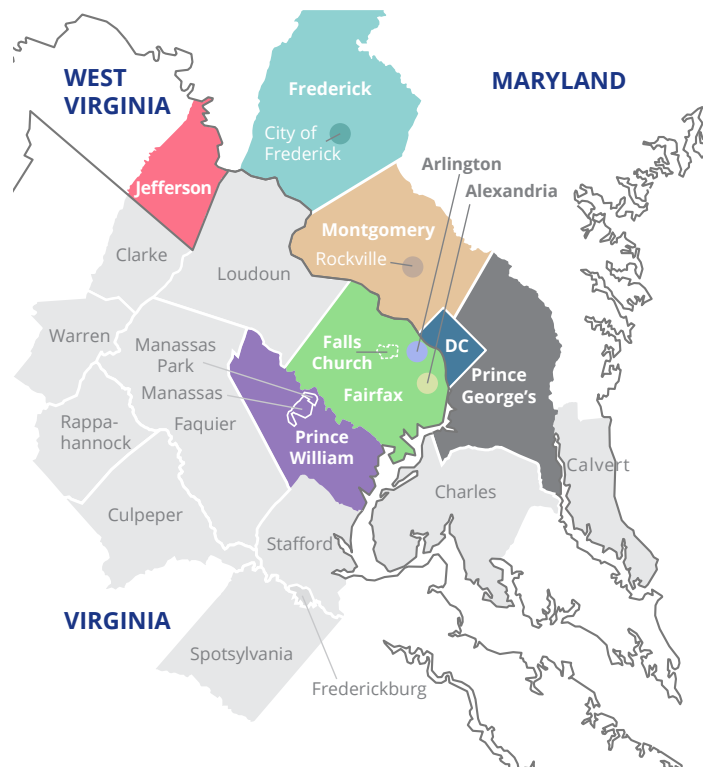

PROTECTED CLASS

The Fair Housing Act and many state & local laws prohibit housing discrimination on the basis of your membership in a protected class. The federal Fair Housing Act protects against housing discrimination on the basis of your race, color, religion, national origin, sex, disability, and familial status. In Maryland, there are additional statewide protections for marital status, sexual orientation, and gender identity. In Virginia, elderliness (55+) is protected.

HOUSING DISCRIMINATION IS OFTEN SUBTLE AND CAN BE DIFFICULT TO RECOGNIZE.

HERE ARE SOME RED FLAGS:

- A housing provider charges you a fee for your assistance animal, or requires you provide some sort of certification stating that the animal has received specific training.
- An agent makes discouraging comments about families with children or indicates that there are specific rules that only apply to kids.
- You make an appointment to view an available property and when you arrive, an agent tells you that it's no longer available.
- A housing provider tells you they think you would prefer to live in a different location, or ignores other reasonable preferences you've stated.
- You're discouraged from applying for an apartment or home loan even though you qualify for it financially.
- A housing provider tells you that they do not accept housing vouchers, or that they have policies like income requirements that prevent any voucher holder from living there (in Washington, DC and Montgomery, Frederick, and Howard Counties in Maryland).
- A housing provider makes derogatory comments about you, your neighbors, or residents in a neighborhood you're interested in living in based on your/their membership in a protected class.

One of the most effective ways to find out whether housing discrimination has happened is through civil rights testing, or mystery shopping for housing. The ERC is a leading expert in civil rights testing and may be able to assist you by conducting an investigation if you think you have experienced housing discrimination.
